

NATIONAL TRUST FOR SCOTLAND MEDIA RELEASE

14 June 2017

Glasgow conservation volunteers protecting spectacular scenery

The National Trust for Scotland's Glasgow Conservation Volunteer Group will be hard at work protecting Scotland's spectacular scenery this summer.

The hardworking volunteers are looking for new members to join their group and get involved in caring for Scotland's treasures.

The group will be working on projects at properties cared for by the National Trust for Scotland, Scotland's largest conservation charity across Dumfries and Galloway, Ayrshire and Arran, Glasgow and Argyll.

Conservation Volunteer Co-ordinator Julie Bond said:

"Our conservation volunteers make a massive contribution to the care of the Trust's 200,000 acres of countryside, historic estates and beautiful gardens. They've got a packed programme of activities planned for the next few months. As the summer approaches, volunteering with the Trust is a great opportunity to get out, explore your outdoors and play a key part in caring for our countryside too."

Travel, accommodation and meals are all organised for volunteers signing up for these projects. For more information on becoming a conservation volunteer and the full programme, visit <http://www.nts.org.uk/Volunteering/Outdoor/>.

The Glasgow Conservation Volunteers group is one of five working with the National Trust for Scotland, the charity that conserves and promotes Scotland's heritage.
